

Landing page content

📍 Project	🌸 Laveyoo
⚙️ Status	Not started
👤 Assigned to	🅅 Thelma
🏷️ Tags

Tillsee — Landing Page Copy

Slow enough to feel something.

01 · HERO

Somewhere, someone is waking up to you.

Each morning, ten people. Five hearts to give. One conversation at a time.

This is Tillsee — a small, quiet place to fall in love again, the way it used to happen. One person at a time. With your whole attention.

[Join the waitlist] Opening this season in New York & Boston

02 · THE RECKONING

Do you remember what it felt like?

Before the swiping. Before the queue of half-strangers. Before love became a thing you scheduled between meetings and gave up on by Sunday.

Do you remember when meeting someone felt like weather — sudden, undeserved, a little holy?

We do.

And we've been watching what the apps have done to it. The endless scroll. The dopamine drip. The slow, expensive lesson that the more people you're shown, the lonelier you somehow become.

It isn't your fault. You were never meant to choose between three hundred faces at midnight. No heart was built for that.

So we built something else.

Something with a slower pulse.

03 · A MORNING ON TILLSEE

Ten people. Five hearts. One conversation.

At first light, before the city remembers itself, your phone glows once.

Ten people are waiting for you — chosen the night before, one by one, by something gentler than an algorithm and slower than a swipe. Read them with your coffee. Sit with them. Notice who you keep thinking about an hour later.

You're given five hearts to spend. Only five. The point isn't to spread them. The point is to mean them.

And when one of yours finds one of theirs — when two people, on the same quiet morning, choose each other — we open a single door between you.

One conversation. Only one. No queue beside it, no other matches blinking for your attention. Just one person, slowly becoming known.

Stay as long as you like. A week. A month. Until you meet for coffee and don't need us anymore.

The next ten profiles will wait. They are not going anywhere. We are not in a hurry, and neither are you.

04 · FOUR PROMISES, KEPT GENTLY

What we will, and will not, do.

Ten a day. No more.

The world will not show you more people than your heart can hold. We will. A small, careful list, sent once a morning, and then the day is yours.

Five hearts. Make them count.

You only get five likes. We did this on purpose. When a thing is scarce, it becomes a choice — and dating, somewhere along the way, stopped being a choice. We're giving it back.

One conversation at a time.

This is the part we love most. When two people choose each other, we close the rest of the room. No other chats. No other matches whispering in the background. Just one person, and the long, slow art of being known by them. Leave when you're ready. Not before.

Built on who you are.

We will not match you on your jawline. We will match you on the slow, true things — how you fight, how you forgive, what makes you cry at the kitchen sink. The things that decide, in the end, whether a love lasts the winter.

Every other app promises love. We promise one real conversation at a time. That's a promise small enough to keep.

05 · BUILT ON WHO YOU ARE

Eighty questions. One honest portrait of a person.

Photographs are beautiful liars. They show you a jaw, a smile, a holiday in Lisbon — but never the particular way a person hums while cooking, or how they hold a grudge, or what they wanted to be when they were twelve.

We ask the other questions. The ones that matter when the lighting goes dim.

How do you love? How do you grieve? What do you reach for on a difficult Sunday? What did you used to believe, and what do you still?

It takes an hour. We know.

But love is not a thing you should rush into being known.

By the time your face appears on someone's morning, we already know enough about you both to be quietly, almost embarrassingly sure that you should meet.

06 · THE COFFEE CLUB

Some things still happen best in person.

Twice a month, in a small café in Brooklyn and another in Cambridge, we set out twenty-five chairs and a lot of good coffee.

No name tags. No icebreakers. No one telling you where to sit or what to say.

Just warm light, the smell of espresso, and a room full of people who, like you, decided that love might still be something you can stumble into — across a table, mid-sentence, while the rain comes down outside.

You can come without being on the app. You can come with a friend. You can come and leave without saying a word to anyone, and we'll be glad you came anyway.

We just wanted to make sure the cities we love still had rooms where strangers could meet softly.

[See the next gathering]

07 · WHO TILLSEE IS FOR

And who it isn't.

Tillsee is for the ones who've deleted the apps three times this year and felt only relief.

For the ones who'd rather have one slow dinner than fifty unanswered openers.

For the ones who still — quietly, stubbornly, despite all evidence — believe that the right person is out there, and that meeting them shouldn't feel like a second job.

For the ones who are tired of being entertained, and ready to be moved.

If you want options, volume, a feed to fall into — we understand. There are beautiful apps for that. This is not one of them.

This is a small room. A slow morning. A long letter.

If that sounds like what you've been missing, you're already home.

08 · THE WAITLIST

We're opening the door slowly. On purpose.

The first thousand people on Tillsee will set the temperature of everything that follows. We're letting you in a few hundred at a time — first in New York, then Boston, then wherever the slow ones are waiting.

Leave us your name. We'll write to you once, when it's your turn.

It won't be a marketing email. It will read more like a letter from a friend who's been waiting to introduce you to someone.

[Your name] [Your email] [Wait for me]

No noise. No nudges. Just one quiet morning, eventually, when the right person is ready and so are you.

Footer

Tillsee — slow enough to feel something. For the ones who are done with swiping, and not yet done with love.
